Mrs. Gold and Mrs. Lawrie are Successful Contestants in Essay Competition

(Review Correspondent)

KEATING, Oct. 23.—The October meeting of the South Saanich Women's Institute was held on Thursday evening with a good average attendance. Mrs. Gale, the president, was in the chair. Only a short business meeting was held as the essay competition was expected to take up most of the evening. Two important resolutions were passed, the first one being in response to a request that the members hold a card party at the Health Centre; and the second resolution dealing with the exhibit which the Institute has decided to enter at the Potato Fair. Some very interesting essays were written on "What I would do with twenty-five thousand dollars." Many ideals were set forth by the writers, Mrs. Lawrie presented such an alluring picture of an Amusement Centre at Elk Lake that it is a great pity some one who has $25,000 lying around idle, could not be induced to carry her plans to fruition. She received second prize for her paper. Mrs. Gould, the winner of the first prize essay, centered her thought upon the home and its surroundings first, then out to the larger home, the community in which she lives, with a kindly thought included to help those who are in need. Each paper was interesting and carried helpful thoughts in some way. Miss MacNab and Mrs. Styan were the judges. "Small cakes and cookies" was the roll call for the evening, while the one chosen for the next meeting will be "Christmas Recipes." Plans were made to hold a card party on Oct. 27, when the following ladies will have charge of arrangements: Mrs. Amey, Mrs. Butler, Mrs. E. T. Laurie and Mrs. Wood. A pleasant half hour was spent at the close of the meeting when refreshments was served, the members of the Farmers' Institute joining the ladies.

The Girls' Institute Club of Keating held a meeting on Thursday evening with the president, Miss Gale, occupying the chair. The new sink provided by the club has recently been installed in the Institute kitchen much to the delight of those interested. The secretary's and treasurer's reports were received and adopted. Tentative plans for a Thanksgiving concert were made. The meeting was then adjourned.

There was a good attendance of members of the South Saanich Farmers' Institute, at the Temperance Hall on Thursday evening, to listen to the address delivered by Mr. Munro, of the department of agriculture, his subject being "Soil Fertility." (Continued on page 2)

WEEKLY NEWS BUDGET

Series of Men's Bridge Evenings to be Held Throughout the Winter

(Review Correspondent.)

JAMES ISLAND, Oct. 22.—On Friday night the first of a series of men's bridge evenings was held at Mr. G. P. Allen's house. These "stag parties" are to rival the ladies' bridge afternoons but are to be strictly bridge with no prizes or refreshments to distract attention. Three tables were made up and we hope that the players will meet every Friday evening through the winter. Captain Bissett is the next host and we are wondering where he will give his party. In the Pilot House?

Mr. Angles' launch the "Lassie" must bear a charmed life. Last winter she sank at her mooring in the lagoon and emerged none the worse; while in last Monday's storm she dragged her anchor all the way to Bazan Bay. Instead of wrecking herself on the rocky beach there, she remained safely anchored until the "Alcar" found her and towed her back next day.

All the launches, except Mr. Mercer's, are now peacefully moored in the lagoon for the winter make a very pretty picture there—the "Enetai," "Alcar," "Lassie," "Double O," "Lobelia" and "Nance."

Miss Morrison was the guest of Miss Margaret Eyles for a few days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm spent the week-end with the Macnaughtons in Victoria.

The whist drives have started again at the Moore Club. Last Wednesday night there were five tables, the prize winners being Mrs. Rivers and Mr. Emmens.

Several old friends have been visiting the island during the last week—amongst them Mr. and Mrs. Gould and Mr. Green. Mr. Gordon Findlay has remained and is working at the plant.

On Saturday a football team visited us from Fulford Harbor and gave us a very exciting game. The Fulfords proved the better team and beat us two to nil, after which there was a grand spread in the No. 2 Boarding House where Mrs. Rivers, Mrs. Emmens and Mrs. Taylor with the help of the young girls entertained the visitors. The tables were very prettily decorated and there was an abundance of food which came in useful afterwards for the James Islanders and their guests danced until 2.30 and must have been hungry! The visitors then returned home and we hope they reached there safely and in time to get ready for church.

MONTHLY MEETING OF
SOUTH SALT SPRING
WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The regular monthly meeting of the South Salt Spring Women's Institute was held in the Institute Hall at Fulford on Saturday, October 13, with a fair attendance of members, the president, Mrs. Maxwell, in the chair.

The minutes of last month's meeting were read and approved and the financial report read and adopted. Mrs. Reid was appointed delegate to the Conference to be held in Victoria in November.

It was decided to have a Halloween dance and supper in the Hall on Friday, November 2. The music to be provided by the South Salt Spring orchestra, and among other attractions there will be a duet sung by Mrs. Maxwell and Mrs. Reid entitled "Yes, we have no more Pumpkins today," also a guessing contest for a fruit cake.

Mrs. Eaton gave a very instructive demonstration on millinery, which resulted in a hat being made, which was presented to our very latest member.

The business being concluded a very sociable half hour was spent during which Mrs. Jackson served dainty refreshments.

"Tour Round
the World" a Great Success

Six Countries Visited—Much Time and Thought
Given in Arranging Programme—Splendid Response by Car Owners

On Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Union church, a very successful event took place, namely: "The Tour Round the World." There was a very large attendance.

Canada
Starting from Canada (Wesley Hall), which was prettily decorated with maple leaves and flags, and the tables being laid with all kinds of good things to eat, also fancy articles for sale. The ladies in charge were: Mrs. Douglas, Mrs. Inglemills, Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Rombough, Mrs. Ormond, Mrs. Bowcott and Mrs. Speedie. Miss Ivy Hill was dressed to represent Canada.

Greenland
Greenland was represented at the home of Mrs. McLeod, at the entrance of which was a tent for the people to pass through into the house, which was suitably decorated with green trees, and cotton batten being used to represent snow. Brown bread and blubber was served. Pen-nants and candies, etc. were on sale. Assisting Mrs. McLeod were: Mrs. McNeil and Mrs. Cowell dressed in pretty costumes.

Japan
The setting for Japan was at the home of Mrs. J. T. Taylor. The passengers who were met on the verandah by Master Ernest Jackson were conveyed in a rickshaw to their destination, which was a lotus garden. The house was prettily decorated with chrysanthemums, and evergreens, a pool of water and imitation birds. The ladies were dressed in Japanese costume. The visitors knelt on the floor on cushions, and small stools were placed in front of them, on which were served plates of rice, which was eaten with chop sticks. Tea, without sugar or cream, was also served. Whilst visitors partook of refreshments, Miss Anna Jackson sang the "Japanese National Anthem," accompanied on the piano by Miss Kathleen Taylor. Miniature kimonos were on sale. Ladies assisting Mrs. Taylor were: Mrs. Creighton and Mrs. Jackson. Miss Winnifred Taylor represented a Japanese flower girl.

Turkey
Turkey was portrayed at the home of Mrs. Simister. An air of mystery pervaded as the tourists were conducted through the dark streets (halls) by a guide (Mrs. Simister), dressed in the Turkish national costume, to the Sultan's palace, which was beautifully furnished with Oriental rugs, drapes and antiques, kindly loaned by Carter's Oriental Store, Victoria. The Sultan (Mr. Simister), who was gorgeously attired, caused much fun by his wit-cisms, and his wives, (Mrs. Anstey, Misses Grace and Nancy Simister), who were appropriately dressed, acted their parts to perfection. A most realistic atmosphere was effected by the odor of incense burning. Strong coffee was served. Turkish delight and candy cigarettes were offered for sale.

Italy
Italy was portrayed at Mr. Griffiths, who were prettily dressed in Italian costumes. Small bags of candy called "Hokey Pokey," strings of beads and small pictures were on sale. Mr. Ellis cleverly impersonated Garibaldi, the Liberator, and he also gave selections on the melodion. Mr. Griffiths who was hardly recognizable, recited appropriately. From the window could be seen Mount Vesuvius in eruption (a fire in the garden) and also the Bridge of Sighs.

PACIFIC NORTH-WEST
POTATO SHOW

British Columbia is invited to take part in the Pacific North-West Potato Show, which is to be held in Spokane on November 20 to 23, inclusive. This show is being financed entirely by the Spokane Chamber of Commerce. British Columbia growers are strongly urged to send in exhibits to this show. The Pacific Griffiths, who were prettily dressed in Italian costumes. Small bags of candy called "Hokey Pokey," strings of beads and small pictures were on sale. Mr. Ellis cleverly impersonated Garibaldi, the Liberator, and he also gave selections on the melodion. Mr. Griffiths who was hardly recognizable, recited appropriately. From the window could be seen Mount Vesuvius in eruption (a fire in the garden) and also the Bridge of Sighs.

Scotland
"Scotland for Ever"
"Here's tea the hills, the heath and the heather,
The bonnet, the plaidie, the kilt and the feather."

Visitors were greeted by the skirl o' the pipes and drums, and accompanied to the verandah. There they witnessed the Scottish Reel, the Reel O' Tulloch, and the Highland Fling. In the drawing room Mrs. McIntosh gave a Scottish sang and story. The setting of the living room was Aberdeen Fish Market, in which the various wares were marketed by the fishwives. A plentiful table was laden with haggis, oatmeal cookies, Scotch buns, scones, wine, and numerous other good things. In the basement was a scene of industry showing the fishermen preparing their wares for market. Fishwives were: Mrs. Armstrong, Mrs. Sam Brethour, and Mrs. Munro. Characters represented were: Flora McDonald by Mrs. Wilkinson, Bonnie Prince Charlie by James Armstrong, Bonnie Jean (as immortalized by Burns) Miss Holsworth. The Lone Jew of Aberdeen by Alex Sangster. Fishermen dressed in character: Mr. Ernie Munro and Mr. William Munro. Capt. Wilson played the pipes, Raymond Brethour the slide drums, and Miss Livesay and Mrs. Deacon the piano. Mrs. Wilkinson, Miss Holsworth, Capt. Wilson and Jimmie Armstrong danced the reel to the "March of the Cameron Men." The visitors were brought to mind by the latter's dancing, the well-known lines: "and his light springing footsteps were rampling the heath" (Capt. Wilson's toes). Mrs. E. Munro and Mrs. C. R. Wilson assisted in the house.

Ireland
The setting for Ireland was at the home of Mrs. Wemyss, where green was very much in evidence. Much fun was caused by visitors kissing the Blarney Stone, and the Wishing Well was well patronized. Master Ernest Roberts and little Miss Gladys Roberts danced an Irish Jig in a pleasing quaint style, which delighted the tourists. "Bogie," the little dog, wore for the occasion a green bow, and went through his numerous clever tricks most readily. The rooms were suitably decorated with borders of crepe paper on which was Irish dancers. Numerous curies were on show, amongst which was a shillalah. Baked potatoes with butter was served. A kipper was suspended on a string over the table to get the flavor—an old Irish custom. Mr. Wemyss was dressed as an Irish aristocrat and Mr. Ramsay as an Irish peasant. The ladies assisting Mrs. Wemyss were: Mrs. Ramsay, Mrs. Knight and Mrs. Warrender, all of whom were dressed most becomingly in Irish costume.

North-West Show until this year has only taken in the States of Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Washington. With the inclusion of British Columbia it is hoped the growers will take advantage of this opportunity to advertise B. C. products.

Those interested in this show should write to the manager of the Pacific North-West Potato Show, Chamber of Commerce, Spokane, Washington, for prize lists and entry cards. Certified seed and commercial potatoes only are recognized.

OUR DAIRY OUTPUT

While the production of cheese has decreased in Canada during the present century, the making of creamery butter and of condensed milk products has greatly increased. In 1900 the production of cheese in this country was 220,843,263 pounds; in 1922 it was 131,530,053 pounds. In the first year of the century, 36,000, 739 pounds of creamery butter was produced; last year the production amounted to 146,863,517 pounds. In 1900 the condensed milk products amounted in value to $269,520; last year they reached $6,839,232. The butter output of the Prairie Provinces in the last dozen years has increased enormously. From being importers those provinces have become exporters, and their products have received a good reception in the British market. As regards cheese, if Canada would regain the place she formerly held in those markets, it is plain that she must adopt progressive measures such as that inaugurated on April 1, of the present year, when the official grading of factory cheese and butter intended for export commenced. In the three Prairie Provinces and in Nova Scotia government grading of cream at the creamery has also been instituted with good results, so far as butter-making is concerned.

CARELESS PARKING

The parking of automobiles near curves or at the top of hills on main highways to make mechanical repairs or to change a tire is provoking unfavorable comment among motorists. This practice of careless parking is not confined to any one section, it is universal and should be discouraged.

Frequent warnings of the danger attached to this practice have been issued by authorities, but to no avail. There seems now but one effective remedy and that is a stringent campaign by the traffic police officers patrolling our main highways.

There are, of course, instances when a car becomes so completely disabled that it cannot be removed to a safe position at the side of the road, but such cases are very few.

Most cars that stall or develop tire trouble can be pushed to the side of the road, or if there happens to be a side road near by push the car around the corner.

In your vexation over your car difficulties do not lose sight of the safety of your fellow motorists. Statistics show that a great many of the serious automobile accidents have been caused by careless parking.

Should you be alone and are unable to push your car out of the path of traffic, ask assistance from a passing motorist. He will be impressed by your thoughtfulness in aiding traffic and will be pleased to give you a helping hand.

A NEWSPAPERLESS CITY

For three days, recently, New York was without daily newspapers. For three days 6,000,000 people were without knowledge of world events, and local happenings. For three days, they knew nothing of what department stores had to offer or what new shows and pictures were appearing in town.

And here is the result:

Shopping decreased 10 per cent, the first day, 30 per cent. the second day and the third day showed a decrease of more than 50 per cent.

Theatres had a falling off in attendance of about 20 per cent.

Salesmen and salesgirls who work in department stores on commission suffered a loss in wages which will total nearly $1,000,000 a day.

A newspaperless city means vast business and personal losses. A newspaperless world would be unthinkable.

GOOD ROADS ESSENTIAL

Vancouver Island has the natural attractions to draw visitors from all parts of the world, but unless we have good roads a large share of them will never see the island, and its scenery.

WHAT BANK STATEMENTS HIDE

The revelations as to the manner in which the assets of the Home Bank had been impaired over a period of years without the losses being shown in the returns to the Dominion government or the reports to the shareholders, emphasize the fact that figures do not indicate a great deal in regard to the position of a financial institution or an industrial company unless they are interpreted by a competent expert. Some of the banks have hidden assets running into millions. The Home Bank had equally large hidden liabilities.

When the Standard Bank found it necessary to adjust its reserves to take care of losses on certain industrial loans, General Manager Ranson explained to The Financial Post that this was necessary because the bank had followed the custom of "window-dressing" with its assets. In other words the statement was made to show all the reserves and there was no surplus to take care of losses without changing the "window."

Other banks have followed a more conservative policy. One of the largest of the Canadian banks sustained losses reported around $5,000,000 in Mexico at the time of the revolution and was able to meet this loss from hidden reserves without altering the published statement. Similarly, as the results of the collapse in the sugar market a few years ago, one of the larger banks sustained losses reported at $7,000,000 and was able to meet these from its hidden surpluses.

In the recent period of industrial depression and adjustment other banks than the Union, Standard, and Home, no doubt had losses. One of the smaller banks we know had a loss of upwards of $2,000,000 on a ship-building account. But evidently these losses were taken care of, as in the case of the ship-building loss mentioned, out of hidden reserves.

These definite indications that the published returns of the banks may fail to reveal hidden reserves or hidden losses, lend emphasis to the argument that there should be at Ottawa a competent, experienced banker to supervise the monthly reports on behalf of the Minister of Finance, with the authority to ask for additional information regarding important items and otherwise keep in touch with conditions at head office. By this means it is argued that unsound loans could be checked before they involve overwhelming losses, as the difficulties of the banks have invariably centered around transactions handled at head office. Supervision of this kind might tend to prevent impaired loans being carried and increased until the whole structure is undermined.

NOTES-BY THE WAY

By "Observer"

The Home Bank failure has brought before the public the fact that many of the accounts of the modern banks can be classed as savings accounts. The latest bank failure has therefore been followed by a demand from many quarters for the various Provincial governments to found Provincial banks, mainly for the purpose of taking care of the savings of the people. Many schemes have been put forward by the so-called economists who make these demands, but in all their writings they show a lamentable ignorance of the facilities for savings placed before the people of the country by the Dominion government by the Post Office Savings Bank. This institution has more branches than all the chartered banks placed together, and is being constantly extended to meet the demands of the people. Savings to the amount of $1,500 may be deposited in any one year, and the total amount allowed to be deposited by any one depositor is $3,000. This maximum is all that seems necessary for bank savings to amount to, as all sorts of Dominion and Provincial government bonds are available for any one who may be so flush as to want to invest any greater amounts. It would be greatly to the advantage of everyone to interest themselves in the workings of the P. O. Savings Bank.

During the late war many patriots who wished to place themselves before the public advanced many schemes. One of them was to change the name of the province of New Brunswick. This, as it should have, fell through. One gentleman, holding the rank of Colonel, writes from the Old Country to Lieut.-Governor Brett, of Alberta, stating that he detected a faint Germanic flavor in the name Alberta, and suggested that it be changed. He did not make any suggestions about the name to be adopted, but he most likely has a favorite name to suggest. At present there seems no great rush among the people to change the name of the province, which was first given to the district of Alberta, as a compliment to Prince Alberta, Prince Consort to Queen Victoria, in 1875.

Quite a stir has been occasioned the past week through the publication of the intention of the local government to inflict a special tax of $250.00 on all stages and busses doing a passenger or freight business. This tax, in addition to the various municipal and other licenses and taxes, will put most of the stages out of business. This tax seems to be the logical termination of the meeting held in the Chamber of Commerce rooms some months ago, when one of the city aldermen made the suggestion that a gasoline tax should be placed on cars, as this would increase the cost of running the busses, and make the busses raise their rates nearer to the level of ordinary transportation companies. The Attorney-General seems to have gone this Alderman one better in his latest edict, which with the gasoline tax, which is stated by the Minister of Public Works is to be presented to the coming session, will surely please the various transportation corporations of the province, whether it suits the common people who will have to bear the burden of work.

PRINCE OF WALES KING OF CANADA

Serious rumors are in circulation regarding the Prince of Wales and Canada, according to the Daily Sketch.

The prince's declared attachment to the Dominion and his promise to return there has occasioned much speculation, the paper says, as to whether a change in the constitution of Canada is contemplated. Some persons seem to foresee great developments within the Empire, the sketch continues. One of them is the elevation of Canada from the status of a Dominion to that of a kingdom.

The story is likely to arouse skeptical laughter here, but the newspaper prints it seriously.

DR. CAV. DI CASTRI LECTURING IN ITALY

The following article from an Italian paper and translated into English has been received by Miss Rosa Matthews, commenting on a series of lectures by Dr. Cav. Di Castri, the well-known singing master:

The appearance in Turin as a guest of the Society of Artists by Dr. Cav. Di Castri in his six masters lectures on the art of singing in the production and resonance of the voice, and on the teachings of the pianoforte assures Dr. Cav. Di Castri another triumph in the vocal-music world. The scientific and pedagogic researches of Dr. Cav. Di Castri marks a new era in the field of such important subjects which forms the most complex discussion of the present days, when specially in the vocal world the quackery and the empiricism are substituting the scientific form thus impeding the teaching of this art which does not create in such condition at present the artists that were given to the light in passed epochs.

On the eve of his return to British Columbia, Dr. Cav. Di Castri, a pedagogue of international fame, enabled the students and the masters to learn the knowledge of our old masters of "Bel Canto" that knowledge that was not left to us in writing, and from this ignorance the existence of numberless methods and systems of which the tragic results were described—as Dr. remarks—a few years ago by the well known master Lamperti who said: "Many youngsters with splendid voices come to Milan to study singing. After about two years of studies, singing only songs and arias from operas preceded by a few scales and arpeggios, these poor unfortunates go before the public with voices more defective than before, and gradually without knowing why, they are obliged to give up the art for ever."

The lectures on the teaching of the pianoforte Dr. Cav. Di Castri proves how a period of time of about four years of practical studies could be saved. The various branches of the six lectures embracing the two subjects are: Production and resonance of the vocal sound, timber, respiration, resonators, larynx, hyoid bone, hyoglossus muscle, tongue, vocal cords and the controlling power and not as the only seat of the formation and production of the vocal sound, attach or emission of the voice, the vocal apparatus, classification of the voices, registers, equalization of the compass portamento legato, staccato, messa di voce; recitativo, embellishments, cadences, style in the art of singing, hygienic suggestions. History of the pianoforte, harpsicord and clavicoord; fundamental principle, efficiency, literary classic and music culture, rules governing the technique, muscular gymnastic—not practical fingers and the hand, the rhythm elements, pedals, interpretation and style, power and velocity, the artistic elements, music and woman.

AMMUNITION SEIZED ON SHIP

A seizure of 56 mauler pistols and 40,000 rounds of ammunition was made by officials in Vancouver recently, just as the liner Empress of Australia was about to sail for the Orient. The contraband was in different parcels of baggage, bore the names of fictitious persons, and was consigned to different state rooms.

Manitoba led the provinces of Canada in the monthly competition held by the Dominion department of agriculture for the best butter produced, stated the dairy commissioner. All provinces with the exception of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, take part in the competition. Manitoba butter scored 97.7 out of a possible 100. Ontario scored 97.

The Romance of
a Lunatic Asylum
By HEADON HILL

The Lost Fight for Time

As it was, as soon as all was quiet in the house, he prepared to quit his room with confidence in being able to effect his purpose. This was neither more nor less than to communicate to Kate certain plans for her escape now nearing maturity. Matches were a forbidden luxury to the supposed lunatic, nor had he possessed any, would he have dared to strike one; but, as near as he could judge, it was about one o'clock when he silently opened the door and stole on to the landing.

As on the night when Lottie had released him, there was a faint glimmer from the hall below, where he knew that there was a man on duty at the door. The corridors, too, branching off right and left to the male and female night wards, were sources of danger, for in each of them was a keeper supposed to be wakeful. Save for the moaning of the wind in the trees outside, and an occasional howl from the more distant refractory wards, all was very still.

If it had not been for the issue at stake—one very near his heart—Alf would have thoroughly enjoyed himself. The mere fact of having to go cat foot in another man's house without being caught at it, tickled his professional instincts.

"The spoons in this show are all pewter, or blessed if I wouldn't go and look for them," he chuckled to himself, as his eyes noted all the landmarks—the baize door into the private wing, the head of the main staircase, the lengthening vista of the corridors, and the two doors other than his own opening on to the landing. But he checked his frivolity, and flitted over to the door of the portico-room opposite.

Kate was waiting for him, and softly responded to his two taps on the panel.

"Can you hear me?" he whispered.

"Quite clearly," came the answer.

"Then this is what I wanted to tell you," Alf proceeded. "I hope to have all ready for a bolt tomorrow night. I am supposed to be a regular inmate, and occupy the room opposite this. I have been at work on the window bars with a watch-spring saw that I smuggled in, and I expect to have them cut out during tomorrow, if I am left alone long enough. Then about this time I shall come and let you out, and take you across to my room. I am afraid it will be a bit rough, I miss, for the likes of you, but you'll have to swam down a rope I shall make out of my bed clothes. If I can once get you into the grounds, with a fair start, I'll guarantee to soon have you on the other side of the boundary wall."

"But my room will be locked," said Kate.

"Yes; but I shall be the right side to pick the lock, it won't take me above three minutes," replied Alf, with conscious pride. "I'll try to keep you so."

"Oh, how clever of Lindsay to think of sending a look-alike to impersonate me," murmured Kate, causing Alf to smile grimly. "But tell me," she went on, "has Mr. Cathcart come safely back from India?"

"Yes; and he bade me say, if I had the luck to get the chance, that he's working so as to have you released anyway in a month; only as he couldn't bear to wait so long he put me up to fetch you out best way I could," said Alf. "It's all the law, miss, that makes this difficulty. There's no good in the law that I can see."

"But the law would be on my side since I am not mad," said Kate.

"It ought to be, but it isn't—when you're once inside a place of this kind," Alf moralized through the keyhole. "And now—"

"One word more!" pleaded the prisoner. "If I have been shut up in an asylum legally, it must have been at the instance of—"

"Of the old sweep who runs this show and of his precious non, the object being money," interrupted Alf quickly, guessing the argument forming in her mind. He would have bitten his tongue out rather than narrow her with the certain knowledge of her brother's complicity, half suspected though it was.

He was on the point of withdrawing before further awkward questions were put, when Kate herself urged him to go.

"There is a carriage coming up the drive," she explained. "Good-night, and God bless you."

"Good-bye, and remember tomorrow night, miss," whispered Alf, gliding from the door to the head of the stairs, where he stood intently listening. For a few moments the sound which had reached Kate through her window did not penetrate to the interior of the house, but almost immediately he heard the crunch of wheels, and peering over the banisters he saw the night watchman come yawning out of his hutch and begin to unlock the front door. Directly it was open, a man and woman entered the hall, and Alf's hopes fell to zero. The man was speaking in the well-remembered tones of Victor Vantbrace.

This was a contingency that Alf had dreaded from the first, but his ingenuity had been unable to provide against it. He had trusted to the many irons, which he knew the younger Vantbrace had in the fires of London life, to keep him away from the asylum till Kate's escape should have been accomplished. Fears for his own safety he had none, but he knew that the moment he was recognized his enterprise would be rendered worse than useless, even if his object in posing as a lunatic were not at once discovered. The best that he could hope for if Victor set eyes on him was to be handed over to the police; the worst—well, he was aware by this time that the Vantbraces did not stick at trifles.

He lingered at the stair-head to catch what he could of what was said below, starting in surprise to see that the gorgeously-dressed woman, when she loosened her hooded cloak, stood revealed as the head-nurse. Her words were few enough, but he could hear them plainly.

The pair had come to the foot of the stairs to be out of earshot of the watchman.

"Good-night," she said. "Shall I see you in the morning?"

"Of course," was the reply; "I am going to knock the old man up now, and I shall probably be able to give you the straight tip how to run the thing to a finish."

Alf waited long enough to see Victor make for the lower door into the private wing, and then, as Elmslie began to ascend the stairs, he stole into his room and shut the door, putting his back against it in case the head-nurse was smitten with the instinct to try the lock. But his precaution was needless. He heard her pass into her own room and lock the door.

"Now here is a kettle of fish, and bad 'uns at that," thought Alf, as he sat down on his bed to review the situation. "I'd give the price of the best silver teapot I lifted out of Haverstock House to know what it is those beauties want to run to a finish."

Like most who grope their way blindly through the tortuous by-paths of this wicked world, Alf was ignorant of what should have been the pivot of his action. If he had been aware of the blue bottle from which Simon had been stopping, but which he would have done out of his watch-spring saw and finished off the window-bars there and then. In three hours' time he would have been outside the boundary wall, and in one more at the police-station, and the Grey House would have had an official visit before morning.

As it was, however, that he was the law-breaker, yet with a very sure confidence that the asylum-keeper and his son were bent on some law-protected rascality, he could only try and fathom their intentions. What with pumping Lottie, and the researches of his own practised eye, he had gained a good idea of the internal architecture of the house, and he determined to pay a visit to the private wing.

Unfortunately, the necessity of waiting till Elmslie was probably asleep in bed and till the Vantbraces should have settled down to their conference delayed him, and it was some time before he ventured forth. Once through the baize door, he gained confidence from the total darkness, and rapidly felt his way along the passage to the top of the private wing. There the sound of hushed voices fell upon his straining ears, and, descending the stairs, he traced the sound to its source behind the office door, at which Elmslie had made herself mistress of the fateful secret three weeks before.

As Alf glided in his stocking-feet to the door, his mind went back to his first connection with the Cathcarts and their affairs. It had begun by listening to a father and son in conversation in the dead of night, and now here he was again, an ally of those he had then sought to defeat, engaged in a similar proceeding against a similarly related pair of their enemies.

"A fine old dance that bath-room window at Notting Hill has led me—seems as if I was just where I started," he thought, as he stooped to the keyhole.

The first words he heard told him that he was too late for Victor's explanation of his curiously-timed arrival. The situation, whatever it was, had already been grasped by Simon, who was talking what at first seemed utter foolishness.

"Either a red 'at or a red parasol," he was saying. "It doesn't matter which. One or other of these things will have to be found. And both together would do better still."

"Elmslie has got a red hat; she wore one tonight," replied Victor thoughtfully.

"And now I come to think of it, Lottie used to have a red sunshade," said Simon. "The trouble is she's so huffed because I lock her in at night out of the way of that Talgarth feller, that I shall have a job to make her 'and it over if she's got it still. I told you yesterday how she'd loosed 'im on the landing."

"You can't blame her for trying to hook a swell loony when she has the chance," laughed Victor carelessly. "But what do you want all these red fripperies for?" he added seriously.

"You can't stop a woman's mouth once and for ever with hats and parasols."

"Ah, but I can, though, by mixing 'em up with that notion you just sprung on me," chuckled Simon, and Alf could imagine from his tone that he was leering at his son. "The Reverend Bobby Drew, my prize raving maniac, can't abide red 'ats and sunshades. The girl as jilted him wore such things, it seems, and I was warned when he came 'ere to keep 'em out of his way or there'd be blue murder. Like a red rag to a bull, you know, only as the Reverend Bobby puts in all his time in the refractory, there's been no trouble of the kind—yet."

"Well, there's going to be now," said Victor; "this is how we will work it." And he proceeded to sketch out certain details to be observed in the internal discipline of the asylum on the morrow. Very simple details they were, affecting the exercise hours, and even the costume of one of the inmates, and arranging for a temporary laxity in safe-guarding another; yet, as he listened, Alf felt himself growing white about the gills, and his knees shook under him.

The passionless voice went on, instilling the most minute directions, which were received with grunts of assent by Simon; and though Alf momentarily feared that he would court discovery by being violently sick, he forced himself to remain till the end.

The elder scoundrel's final comment there was further enlightenment for him. "Blowed if that oughtn't to work smooth enough, and all just a haccident in routine. There'll be a hincquest, of course, and a deuce of a row, but that'll blow over a question quicker than if there was a hincquest to be harsked about the medicine. I never did old with that food-doctorin' lay, and I ain't sorry old-Dinky sold you," said Simon, with a special stress on the last sentence that provoked an angry retort from his son.

Alf waited for no more; the pair might settle their differences as best they could. What he was concerned with was to prevent the unspeakable horror on which they were agreed, and regaining his room he began what he would have begun two hours before if he had known then what he knew now. He took out the tiny instrument, half saw and half file, which he kept concealed in the lining of his waistcoat, and set to upon the unsevered bars of his window.

But it was now past four o'clock, and there was a lot of lee-way to make up if he was to make good his escape before daylight started the life of the asylum on one more hideous round. He had gone to work scientifically, so as to leave the iron frame apparently intact till he should be able to lift it bodily out, and there were still three bars to be attacked before that would be possible. He was further handicapped by having to use his tool in absolute silence, lest he should wake Elmslie in the next room, and by having to stop every five minutes to wipe up and hide in a crack in the flooring the iron filings that he made. He was cool enough not to take chances, in spite of what he had heard below, and in case of being disturbed he dared not let those tell-tale particles accumulate. And above all he was hampered by having to work in ink-black darkness.

"I'd give a couple of hundred solid thick 'uns—mother 'd find the coin—if I only had my old dark lantern and half a box of silent matches," he said to himself, as for the twentieth time he fumbled for the notch that he had lost.

Presently a glint of dawn appeared in the sky, and, while it helped his labor, filled him with dread that he would not be in time. Simon was a strict taskmaster and the people at the Grey House were early risers. Even if he could remove the bars, and make good his escape into the grounds before he was visited by one of the keepers, the odds would be against his reaching the boundary wall unseen.

Somewhere down in the kitchen premises a door slammed, and Alf knew that the menials were about their work, though there was still half a bar to be filed through. He paused and shook the iron lattice, but there was as yet strength enough in the unsevered bar to hold it in its place. Another ten minutes would have finished it; but by that time he knew that the day keepers would be trooping up the stairs to relieve those who had been on night duty. According to the usual routine of the establishment, one of the latter would look in upon him before having over-represented his case.

"Shall I go on, and risk the chances of a hunc-and-ery to the wall?" he asked himself, ruefully surveying his unfinished handiwork in the grey light. The answer was not long in doubt.

"No," he muttered; "if they caught me, she'd be alone with those devils, and there must be no thought of that. God help her, but she shall have one friend at hand, anyhow, as I cannot fetch the police."

Leaving the nearly cut-out frame in position, he secreted his file, and cleared up the last traces of his work. Then, quickly undressing, he hid down in his bed in time to welcome the saturnine head-keeper, Hamilton, with the steady breathing of sound sleep; and long after the man had gone away satisfied Alf lay there, scheming, aye, and praying too, in his elementary fashion, for light to turn aside as ghostly a fate as ever hung over an innocent girl.

CHAPTER XXXII. Ghosts Bring News

On the afternoon of the day which broke so ominously at the Grey House, the morning sun shone brightly on the fire in the snug coffee-room of the Bull at Gerrard's Cross. He and Lindsay Cathcart had taken up their quarters at the comfortable old coaching-inn, so as to be in which Alf should bring off the coup when he had undertaken to plan inside the asylum. His lordship had brought down two pairs of his finest carriage-horses which day and night stood ready harnessed by turns to bear the fugitives to a place of safety whenever Alf should be able to effect Kate's escape. For the law, be it remembered, was still on the side of the Vantbraces.

Lindsay had gone to town to make one more attempt to urge the Lunacy Commissioners to speedier action, and when, presently, the door of the coffee-room was opened, Lord Haverstock thought for a moment that he had returned. But when the newcomer advanced to within range of the flickering firelight one glance showed the mistake. The shrunken, diminutive figure in seedy black, clutching a napless tall hat in a claw-like hand, was certainly not that of the well-knit young barrister.

The old peer eyed his manoeuvres with curiosity mingled with amusement, for he saw that he himself was a source of interest to a little man—an interest shown by a half-formed, but quickly checked intention to speak, followed by a nervous retreat to a chair just beyond the radius of the firelight, whence Haverstock became conscious that a pair of furtive eyes were blinking at him.

"I am not taking up too much of the fire, I hope, sir; there pray come and sit down," said Haverstock courteously, moving his chair back.

"No, thank you, I shall sit here," said the little man, tucking his shabby fingers at the cheerful blaze, mumbling thanks. But he did not deign from his scrutiny, and there was something so weirdly uncanny in the sidelong glances that he kept shooting, that Haverstock could stand it no longer.

"You seem to have something to say to me; if so why the deuce don't you say it instead of giving me the jumps?" he started out.

The crouching figure, who dived as though threatened with a stick, "I trust that I have not been often here, sir," he said. "I came here to see a gentleman whom I understood to be staying at the inn, and I was wondering if you could be him—though nearly sure you ain't."

"You mean my friend, Mr. Cathcart," said Lord Haverstock. "I certainly ain't him. Why on earth couldn't you ask me?"

"I am obliged to you, sir, but it is confidential business, and it doesn't always do to be the first to mention names," said the little man. "Much I ask if Mr. Lindsay Cathcart is considered a hard person—that is to say, of a vindictive nature?" he added, looking keenly at the other.

SAVED BY BIRDS

The insects wage eternal war on humanity, pitting their tiny size and incredible numbers against our strength and trained intellects. They attack our food, our shelter, our clothing, and are all the more terrifying because they do it blindly, instinctively and without the least animosity towards us.

Worst of all, the bugs are slowly winning—and for a single reason. That reason is, that stupid man, with the unbelievable short-sightedness to which he is so prone, has deliberately attacked and destroyed his chief ally, the wild bird.

A French naturalist has estimated that if the birds were all to disappear man could live on the earth only nine years; for without the birds, all plants and trees and vegetables would disappear—the worms and bugs would eat them, root and branch. When that happened the cattle and the sheep would not have enough to eat and they would all die. Mankind, unable to survive on fish, or on the insects themselves, would perish miserably in a horrible, crawling, creeping world.

The number of insect species is greater by far than that of all other living creatures combined.

More than 300,000 species have been described, and there are many thousands of undescribed specimens in museums. A small cherry tree, ten feet in height, was found to be infested with plant-lice. By careful computation it was estimated there were 12,000,000 lice on this tree, and it was only one of a row similarly infested.

Insects are enormously productive. If one pair of Colorado potato beetles were allowed to increase without molestation, in one season, where they breed three times, the progeny would amount to more than 60,000,000.

Dr. Forbush states that many caterpillars daily eat twice their weight of leaves; and that a certain flesh-feeding larva will consume in 24 hours 200 times its original weight. There are vegetable-eating caterpillars which, during their progress to maturity, within 30 days, increase in size 10,000 times.

Every thinking person must realize that the natural world, as we see it, before man upsets it with his rough and heedless fist, is the result of countless centuries of adjustment and reacting forces. Long ago it reached a state of balance, where every living thing has its means of support, its enemies, seeks and finds its food, and is in turn the prey and food of some other of Nature's children. Any artificial check or change in the balance might easily cost a century of trouble before the slow process of Nature have made the necessary readjustments.

Man has made many arbitrary changes in the arrangements of Nature, and generally to his sorrow, but nowhere has he shown such ignorance, such greed, such brutality, and such thoroughgoing, incredible stupidity as in upsetting the perfect balance of bird life.

Our insectivorous birds can devour an incredible number of insects, and their nestlings require more of this food, in proportion to their weight, than do the adult birds. Birds digest their food quickly. Prof. Bond says: "The stomachs of birds are often packed so hard and tight with food that it is a wonder how digestion can go on; but it does, nevertheless." Charles W. Nash in one day fed 165 outworn to a three-ounce young robin, and the robin went to sleep hungry. F. H. Mosher saw a pair of rose-breasted grosbeaks feed their nestlings 426 times in 11 hours.

FINDING OF SKELETONS SHOWS WHAT MAN WAS LIKE 15,000 YEARS AGO

Farther excavations at Soluère, near Macon, where scientists have already found thousands of bones of pre-historic horses and buffaloes, have just brought to light skeletons of three Cro-Magnon men. The skeletons, which are intact, give a perfect illustration of the physical characteristics of man 15,000 years ago. They are of men between 20 and 30 years of age and of great stature. The skull in each case is well developed, but not of great length. The nose is long and the jaw exaggeratedly high.

The discovery, which was made by Dr. Arcolin, is declared by paleontologists here as one of the greatest in their branch of science.

In the grotto of Cro-Magnon there had already been found complete skeletons of what have been called the newer palaeolithic men, the first to be compared anatomically with the man of today. They succeeded the Neanderthal race, which had existed for more than 200,000 years until about 25,000 years ago, according to H. G. Wells in his "Outline of History."

"These Cro-Magnons were a tall people with very broad faces, prominent noses, and, all things considered, astonishingly big brains. The brain capacity of the woman in the Cro-Magnon cave exceeded that of the average male of today. Her head had been smashed by a heavy blow. There were also in the same cave with her the complete skeleton of an older man, nearly six feet high, the fragments of a child's skeleton, and the skeletons of two young men. There were also flint implements and perforated sea shells, used, no doubt, as ornaments. Such is one sample of the earliest true men."

In a cave in the Commune of St. Martory, near Toulouse, recently, a student of the University of Toulouse discovered what is probably the only known artistic expression in plastic form of the Cro-Magnon man, considered by Comte Henri de Bégouen, professor of anthropology at the university, as ante-dating by several centuries the remains of a similar type discovered in the cavern of Altamira, Santander, Spain. The professor designated these statues as belonging to a witch doctor, who made them to represent persons and then mutilated them in order to bring about the suffering or death of the originals.

FULFORD HARBOR, Oct. 21.—In the first round for the McPhillips cup the local boys were drawn against Gabriola when they met that team on their own ground. The game which was fast and clean throughout ended in a score of 2-1 in favor of Fulford. Next Saturday the local boys play Ganges at Fulford when they also hope to give that team a hard run in the struggle for the cup.

The local boys seem to be out for blood these days for last Saturday they again returned home with flying colors after making a trip to James Island, where they played that team a return game on their own ground, beating them by a score of 2-0. The dance which was held in the evening was enjoyed very much by the local boys.

CANADA FACES COMPETITION IN DAIRY PRODUCTS

The Dominion dairy commissioner, Mr. J. A. Ruddick, who visited New Zealand and Australia recently in the interests of Canadian dairying, has published his observations in Bulletin No. 34 of the Dominion department of agriculture, entitled "Dairying in New Zealand and Australia." These countries are competing heavily with Canada in the British market and Mr. Ruddick points out, by way of encouragement, some of the advantages enjoyed by Canada in the manufacture and sale of dairy products. These advantages are:

Greater experience in breeding and managing dairy cattle.

A more profitable use of the by-products of the dairy, such as skim milk and whey.

Lower cost of manufacturing butter and cheese.

Proximity to market and lower cost of marketing.

The existence of what is probably the best competitive primary dairy market in the world at Montreal.

A well established and economical export business.

An established reputation for excellence.

Excellent dairy schools and systems of field instructions.

That we may make the most of these advantages, and regain and retain our export business in dairy products with Great Britain, Mr. Ruddick says that attention must be given to half a dozen points, which summarized are:

A keener appreciation of the supreme importance of quality.

A new spirit must be aroused to meet the change of situation that has taken place in the last two or three years.

Universal grading, more frequent deliveries of cream for butter-making and the proper maturing of cheese before shipment.

Re-organization of the factory end of the business by improvement in buildings and equipment, including cool curing rooms and decent salaries for competent cheese and butter-makers.

The fullest co-operation between all the elements that make up the dairy industry in Canada.

The unfair and demoralizing practice of holding cheese and butter-makers financially responsible for "cuts" in the sale price of butter and cheese on account of defects in quality must be dropped as quickly as possible.

The bulletin contains a great deal of information of much interest and value to those engaged in dairying, including the methods of manufacturing and marketing and the laws that prevail in New Zealand and Australia. Copies may be had on application to the Publications branch, department of agriculture, Ottawa.

ADVERTISING PAYS

The merchant who does not advertise is as far behind the times as the old-time stage coach. He plods along in the same old way, year after year, while the more progressive merchant places his wares before the public and increases his business year by year. Persistent advertising has made millions for many progressive merchants, who recognized the value of advertising from the first day they commenced business. The Review goes into almost every home in the district and is the proper medium for reaching the people.

RUDE RURAL RHYMES

POETRY LICENSE

There lived one time a poet cuss whose low-brow wish comes down to us, that women had one common mouth which he might kiss from north to south. Admiring all female creation I still would use discrimination. You know sometimes these poet fellows blow lots of hot air from their bellows, and in the songs that birds have sung we see that many like them young. They have a taste for squabs and chicks and all their little flapper tricks. Nor is youth all, for I opine most birds would draw the color line. And as for me I like some brains; I do not care for silly James. I shun the feminist and Tartar, the whiner and the chronic martyr. Deliver me from home peace wreckers, from tergivers and all hen-peckers. This bard is no polygamist; few are the mouths he ever kissed. In all the charms that he would choose, his present wife just meets his views; he'd have no other in her shoes. From San Francisco to Savannah there is no other girl like Hannah. And if the facts were otherwise I would invent some pious lies; for if that gentle lady hit me no stock size crown would ever fall on me, when I reached the heavenly border they'd make a madman to cheer, an angel to love, and I'd be home with nice soft padding for my bumps.

The Victoria and Island
Publicity Bureau.
Victoria, Oct. 19, 1923

The Editor,
Sidney and Islands Review,
Sidney, B. C.

Dear Sir:

I have just read with great interest your contributor's (the Observer's) alleged reply to my letter taking exception to his captious criticism of one of this Bureau's folders.

From the fact that Mr. Observer has not produced or quote any facts to substantiate his previous attack on the information contained in this folder, "Industrial Victoria," I naturally infer that he has not any of fact to substantiate his statements. His attempts to introduce misleading and to read meanings into words different from those given in the standard dictionary are too apparent to need comment.

As therefore the statements to which Mr. Observer takes exception
I stand unrefuted so far as this Bureau is concerned, the matter needs no reply.

Thanking you for your courteous consideration in publishing this correspondence, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

George J. Warren,
Commissioner.

Here and There

In order to handle the grain this fall the Port William, Ont. force of 300 elevator men will be increased to 700. From 120 to 150 grain trimmers will be employed.

For the five months to August, 1923, Canadian newsprint exports were valued at $35,303,043 against $27,257,382 for the same period in 1922. Pulp exports in the same period were valued at $20,008,461 against $16,075,533.

Grain loading on Canadian Pacific lines during the month of September totalled 26,376 cars or 38-245,200 bushels. This at the beginning of the loading season which was two weeks late this year on account of the retarded harvest.

This has been the greatest season for automobile tourists Montreal has ever experienced, according to the Secretary of the Automobile Club of Canada. Cars, he stated, had come into the city over the King Edward Highway at the rate of two hundred a day, an unusual number from California, Florida, Carolina and Virginia being noticeable.

There was nearly $160,000,000 increase in the total trade of Canada for the first five months of the current fiscal year, according to a return made by the Department of Customs and Excise. The total trade of the Dominion, according to the return, for the five months ending with August, was $785,000,000, as against $626,000,000 during the same period a year ago. Imports during the period were about $393-000,000, as against $303,000,000 a year ago, while exports of Canadian produce rose from $386,000,000 approximately to $386,000,000.

There is a heavy demand for bushmen, according to the Government. The big lumber companies have been engaging men for the bush, and the prospects are that the demand will be heavy for some time and winter conditions good. Wages paid this year by the lumber companies are higher than last year, the rates paid being $10 and $15 a month, whereas a year ago the schedule was down to $26 a month.

With the completion of the harbor works now in progress, Montreal will be in a much better position in 1924 to handle a record flow of grain than ever before. Windmill Point elevator will be increased by 1,250-000 bushels storage capacity, making its total capacity 3,250,000. Four additional shipping berths are being provided at this elevator and will be in commission early next month, and the elevator's loading capacity will be increased from 50,000 to 90-000 bushels an hour.

Reports to the Canadian Pacific Railway, show that there arrived at Winnipeg from the British Isles this year for the purpose of working on the harvest, 11,883 men.
Special efforts are being made to find occupation for as many as possible to cover the winter period, and it is stated that it is now probable that a considerable number of these harvesters from Great Britain and the Irish Free State will remain in the Dominion.

Addressing a recent meeting of the Vancouver Board of Trade, President E. W. Beatty, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, announced that the company proposed immediately to add two large modern steamers to its coast fleet in order to take care of increasing tourist traffic over the company's coastal lines. He also announced the early completion of a new pier at the harbor at a cost of several millions, which has been made necessary by the steady development of Canada's trans-Pacific trade.

AT THE AUDITORIUM

"NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE"

On the immense ranch of Col. Haddington, there is feasting in celebration of the twin racers, Comet and Meteor. At Santa Dolores, near by, where Father Hillaire ministers to his small flock, several outlaws raid the village on the pretense of collecting back taxes. Father Hillaire sends a message to Col. Haddington for help, and Bob responds at the head of a troop of merry cowboys.

In their absence, two masked riders appear at the Haddington ranch, and attempt to steal the twin horses. Col. Haddington resists and is shot down just as Bob returns from the village. The thieves escape with Meteor, despite Bob's efforts to capture them. The Colonel dies and Bob swears vengeance upon his assassins. The southern authorities confiscate Bob's property and he becomes a lawless outlaw. He and Comet as he searches for Meteor and under the name of Bob Velantrie, he wars upon the forces of law.

In Arizona, news comes to Santa Leandra that the "Black Rustler" is running off cattle through Blind Trail pass. Bob is suspected as being the rustler. At Father Hillaire's mission, Val Hannon, daughter of John Hannon, a rancher, meets Bob. The two become interested in each other. Bob goes to Arizona as ranchers meet at Hannon's to discuss ways and means of capturing the "Black Rustler." In fact, Hannon is that individual himself, but none suspects the truth. There is an excited meeting during which the statement is made that it was significant that of all the ranchers, Hannon alone had suffered no loss at the hands of the rustler.

Leaving a saloon where he had cleaned out a gambler and won a girl whom he immediately liberated, Bob meets Val and promptly tells her that he is a hunted man. A bandit tries to shoot Bob and Val saves his life. Bob tells the girl that he will leave Arizona, inasmuch as he must hunt down his father's assassin. Meanwhile, Hannon has discovered that his horse Meteor, which he had stolen at the time he slew Col. Haddington, was missing, and he charges the crime to the unknown rustler. A posse is formed and pursuit begun.

If you have any old magazines, why not hand them into the Sidney Library. Many other people would probably be glad to read them.

announces that Hannon is her father. Bob realizes that he is now powerless to act and quits the country. The ranchers however, continue their quest. A few days later, Hannon and his band are raiding a ranch when cowboys approach and in the fusillade that follows, Hannon is wounded. Bob appears on the scene, changes clothing with him and draws the pursuit upon himself, in the hope of averting disgrace from Val. He is captured and Hannon, who manages to ride back home, dies in Val's arms after revealing the truth.

Val is determined to save Bob from the ranchers and Meteor suddenly gallops home from the hills. She mounts the animal and after a mad ride, reaches the pass where the ranchers are about to hang Bob. She excupates him and he is released, after Brideman, Hannon's lieutenant, corroborates her statement. Bob and Val ride away together as the rope is adjusted around Brideman's neck.

WORTH REMEMBERING

BRUSH ECONOMY
Cut off the worn whisk broom squarely. It will make a splendid stiff brush for the sink.

WALKING SHOES
To make a comfortable pair of shoes waterproof for outdoor use, melt together a dressing of two parts of beeswax to one part of mutton fat. Apply at night and in the morning wipe well with a piece of flannel.

FOR KITCHEN ACCIDENTS
A cloth with equal parts of sweet oil and lime water applied to a burn will bring great relief.

SAVES WORK
When having the house painted, coat the windows with cleansing powder before the painting has started. Then when the house is finished, powder and paint can be removed together.

JUST AS GOOD
Just as effective against moths as a cedar chest is the chest made of soft wood, well oiled with oil of cedar once a year.

DURING HOUSE CLEANING
When washing electric light globes be sure to wet only the glass section as any water left in the metal section might cause a short circuit.

SMOOTH GRAY
Should the gray separate before serving, add a few spoonfuls of boiling water and stir vigorously. It will bring back the smooth texture.

GOOD CAKE
A few blimps on the kitchen table before baking will cause the air bubbles to come to the surface of the cake batter and break, thereby removing all likelihood of falling.

CLEAR THE FLUE
A handful of scrap zinc thrown on the fire is a splendid soot destroyer and flue cleanser.

CUTS THE GREASE
Whenever you clean with gasoline, pour the refuse down the sink pipe. The gasoline will cut the grease deposits. Pour hot water through soon afterward.

PREVENT SCORCHING
Place an old plate in the bottom of the saucepan when boiling a pudding in a cloth so that the pudding will not stick to the bottom of pan.

NEWS OF AN OLD SIDNEY RESIDENT

Pete Tester writes The Review that he met Mr. Gerrie Burke recently. Mr. Burke was a resident in Sidney during part of 1917-18 when he came to recuperate after his sensational escape from Germany where he was a prisoner of war. He and a fellow prisoner, a young Englishman, make the attempt together and were the first British prisoners of war to get out of Germany. He gave The Review an account of the escape at the time he was in Sidney, paying grateful tribute to the Dutcha for the kind hospitable way in which his pal and himself were treated en route to "Blighty." The War Office interviewed them in London and in many other headquarters they had to tell the military authorities all about it.

He lives in Port Arthur, Ont., where he was a resident before joining the forces in the early part of the war. Owing to the hardships endured while in a German prison and on his way to the Dutch frontier his nerves were badly shattered and the sea air of Sidney soon brought him back to his usual normal self. He inquired after a lot of his old Sidney friends.
